MNEK says his career pretty much kicked off when he shared some of his music on MySpace and soon after he had signed a publishing contract with Virgin. I always wanted to do music, he says. I had no plan B. He says the turning point in his career was winning attitude magazine's breakout artist award. His acceptance speech provoked a wave of heartfelt comments. The woman came up to me underground and said, I showed my speech attitude awards to my cousin, and he was literally in tears, and he came out soon after. We have a lot of black British men who kill it: John Boyega, Stormzy, Anthony Joshua, Tinie Tempah and Idris Elba, of course. I see them as people I really admire, and it's empowering for me because it means I'm not the only one in this. I am empowered by my friends in the music industry who are other fellow black men because I see them as my brothers; we have similar experiences and are related to each other. Other.
